The people made up thirty-seven thousand dollars in stock in a few minutes. This company projected by General Gordon, of Georgia, W. H. Useless Appendages of Monarchy-The Spiritual Peers-The Queen's Vachts-Political Questions Briefly Considered.

Lendon, July 27.—Mr. Willis gave notice on Monday in the house of commons that early in next session he would move "that the legislative power of his house in the legislative power of his house of the legislative power of the legislative er of bishops in the house of peers and in parliament is a great hinder few men, and they (or most of them) above to the discharge of their spiritual are in the house of peers by virtue of ance to the discharge of their spiritual are in the house of peers by virtue of functions, prejudicial to the common- the accident of birth, it isn't very hard wealth, and fit to be taken away by It seems to be true and pretty generally accepted as true, that a record of their votes show a terrible balance of wrong headedness, bigotry and prejudice, but at the same time blooks to a stranger as if Mr. Willis' proposes to tput his motion to get as numerous as all the other classes in them out of the house of peers on the wrong ground. Still, the discussion of any evil is not likely to strengthen it, and swell the movement which must eventually result in the reparation of church and state in this county must out, were intended so by those who instituted them, and it is not impossible that even so small a beginning as this may result in a great work later.

In this is a superintendent of take a drink, which is three other vessels entirely devoted to the Queen's service—the Osborne, the Clean and the Elfin, of which I have build something to say before. The have had something to say before. The first named is said to be a splendid ship, fitted at an enormous cost and hood and crowding the range. The are of smaller size and not so hand-burning is now being investigated by our efficient officers.

The are of smaller size and not so hand-some. The "Victoria and Albert" lays all the year round in Portsmouth dock yard, is fully officered and has a full crew of seamen living at the expense of the nation. She has only been employed four days a year for the last ten years, or in the aggregate forty days, at the rate of £10,000 (equal to $50,000) a day. It was said that the queen is ignorant of so credulous a corps as the marines, and expect them to swallow it would indicate an incredible faith in the gulfibility of mankind. As a foreigner was somewhat interested and not a at the comments of a city paper which, fire company, with good chances for discussing this "monstrous waste of money" in connection with the recent effort of the government here to shove

It was suggested in

class of paupers we starve another."
During the past few days working men here have been receiving a great deal of advice, which is proverbially cheap. Some of it unquestionably is disinterested but more of it is in all probability as gratuitous as cheap. Mr. Bradiaugh, for instance, has been talking to the Dean Forest miners and urged them to introduce politics in o all their trades' unions. I don't know how such a thing would work over here, but there have been abundant evidences over on the other side of the water that such a course is mischiev-ous in the extreme. I believe firmly in "unions" and that they are capable of being made the instruments of great good to the working classes, but in view without mixing them up with politics. I also believe firmly in workingmen taking an active interest and share in poli-tics, but I never knew an American trade union to prosper that permitted the politicians to take control of it. I fancy it would exactly suit the employers if their employes in the "unions" would give over discussing their grievances and how to cure them, and devote the time in their meetings to the discussion of the franchise, the law of entail, perpetual pensions, and other kindred subjects. It would give to said employers the opportunity to manipulate the markets and "feather their nests" at the expense of the "union" men turned politicians. By land-laws, labor representation in par-liament and free education need inves-tigation and discussion I can readily believe. And if some figures I have before me are true, it strikes me that the worklapmen are not the only ones interested in the land laws. It is stated here that when the total taxation of this country was about £5,000,-000 a year land paid more than £2,000,-000 of it. Now when the total taxation of the country is over £350,000,000 a year land pays less than £1,000,000. This looks like an outrage by somebody on somebody else, and when it is remembered that nearly all the land in Great Britain is in the hands of a to determine who is the kicker and who are being kicked. Nor is it more difficult to determine who ought to do the kicking in the near future, and who ought to catch the kicks. I find it also stated that the working classes here are four times are avowedly sent there to look after their interests. An American though is bardly in a condition to criticize such a state of things here, for the reason that about the same state of things exists in his own country. I don't believe the workingmen of the United States have a single real repre-sentative in the United States senate, the house of representatives. I happen to know each of the eleven mem-bers of the house and both of the senators for Texas, and while they are all "good men and true" not one of them can fairly be said to represent any of the leading interests of Texas. Both of the senators are lawyers, and of the eleven representatives just eleven of them are lawyers. Lord Salisbury has also been offering some gratuitous adbegin somewhere, why not anywhere? Vice to the working classes. In speak-reposably the notice given by Mr. Willis may mean just such a radical land, maintained that such an event reformation, even though he may not so intend it. Few reforms, as carried belonged, but would only hurt the belonged, but would only hurt the working classes. He said the former had plenty of money, and could live abroad. One of the latter class reply-ing to this statement says:

'He had better take up his history of France, and read it over again. What became of the Frence nobility after the revolution of 1789? They had to go abroad and become dancing masters, cooks, waiters, cabmen and so forth. So would it be of our nobility if a revo-

"Makes us rather bear those His we have. Than fly to others that we know not of." There is reason to believe that the great move of liberalism which spread over Great Britain at the last general election not only disappointed the hopes of the Tories, but upset many of the calculations of Mr. Parnell and his followers. The Parnellites evi-dently hoped and expected to hold the balance of power between the liberals and conservatives, sometimes described as the "recognized political sec-saws." The Irish national league, though one going to be felt as well as seen in the future polities of the country and their borders, are even now attempting to strengthen themselves Lampasas, August 17.—The young this fact, but to tell such a tale even to everywhere. Perhaps it is too early yet to indulge in prosnostications as to the result of the next election, but it begins to look now as if Mr. Parnell is going to be very much stronger after then than he is said. It was estimated that at the last general election that Irish electors had a balancing power of over forty-five votes in England and Scotland and that in the main their vote was given to the liberal candidates. I find it now stated that through the exertion of the Irish committees in the registration courts between seventy and eighty seats may be influenced by a solid Irish vote. During the first week I have met several Irish members of parliament and have had extended interviews with some of them. Among them I mention Mr. Healy, recently returned, who is Mr. Parnell's "right bower." He is a man of force and has an influence in the commons which is distinctly recognized there. His rethe National League, and he is very confident that instead of being weakened by recent events, his party has been very materially strengthened. Mr. Healy, over a year ago, was in Texas, and visited Fort Worth. He came back very much impressed with Texas, and thinks that the state and people have a great future ahead of them. During the next week I am to meet Mr. Parnell and other Irish leaders of whom I expect to get some views as to the issues now especially interesting to them.

While I am on the subject of Irish matters, perhaps it will interest your readers for me to tell them of another "Fenian outrage." A parliamentary paper was published early this week containing correpondence respecting the brig Trio, of Dublin, which on the Queen's birthday, in Corunna harbor, flew at her masthead a flag with a cross and harp on a green ground. "Consul Walker reports to Lord Granville that he sent off an armed boat to the vessel and ordered the mate to lower the flag, which was supposed to be a Fenian emblem. Next day he examined the master on shore, and took the flag from him, and fined one of the crew, who assaulted his clerk. In reply, Lord Granville informs the consul that he acted rightly in calling upon the master of the Trio to explain why he did not display the national ensign in obedience to the regulations of the port, but that he exceeded his powers in taking possession of the flag, which should be returned to its VOL. 7. RAPE AND ROPE.

Taken from Jail by a Mob-His Crime Confessed and Explated. Without Judge or Jury.

Special to the unrette.

Terrell, Angust 17.—Last night, for the first time, Judge Lynch held court in the city of Terrell. The subject was a negro named Martin Bradley, who two nights previously had made an attempt to outrage the person of Miss Cora Bickham, a waitress in one of the city restaurants. The young lady was sleeping to her room, the bed teing near an open window. She was aroused by a rough touch on her feet, and to her begran discovered and to her horror discovered a hegro in her room. She naturally screamed for help, help, and her mother was soon with her, The negro then passed out of the room, but reappeared at the window, and the moon shining brightly the two ladles had no difficulty in getting a look at the villian. They recognized him, and he proved to be a porter at J. Tom Wilson's saloon. Thursday evening a preliminary trial was held before 'Squire T. L. Frank. Almost the entire day was occupied in securing a jury, taking testimony and listening to the remarks of the attorneys. At the conclusion of the trial, the negro was held in the sum of $700 to appear before the next term of the district court. Falling to give bond, he was remanded to the caluboose. During the night Constable Spencer was approached by a party demanding the keys of the jail, which of course, he refused to deliver. Thereupon a party of quiet and determined men was organized who armed themselves and proceeded to the jail. Leveling their guns on the guards, they had things all their own way, and immediately proceeded to break down the iron door between them and their victim. This was soon accomplished and their victim gagged, a rope placed around his neck and they went on their way to the place of execution, which was nearly a mile distant. He was bung to an eak tree until dead. The body remained there until about nine o'clock this morning when the city authorities out it down and brought it to town where it was turned over to an undertaker subject to further orders. The negroes refused to bury him or have anything to whatever to do with him. A jury of inquest was empanciled this evening, and a verdict rendered that Martin Bradley came to his death by hauging, at the hands of parties unknown to the jury. This will be a lesson to evil doors that

The occupation tax was raised to the maximum figures allowed by the state laws. An ordinance was pa-sed to collect the recent school tax voted by the people. ANOTHER ACCOUNT. Dallas, Angust 17.—News of a lynching at Terreil last night was brought here this evening by passengers on the west bound Texas and Pacific train. Martin Bradley, a negro, yesterday morning before daylight attempted to ravish a respectable young white lady. Her struggles and screams prevented the brute from accomplishing his purpose, and he fled but was captured, had an examining trial and held to appear in court in the sum of sum of hundred dollars bond, which he failed to make and was lodged in the city prison. Last night two men waited on Constable Milier, who had made the arrest and had the prisoner in custody, and ordered him to surrender Bradley to them, which the officer refused to do. They left and soon remen and took the keys from Officer Miller. They conveyed the negro to the center of the town, and gave him fifteen minutes to talk, pray, etc. He confessed to the crime, prayed for forgiveness and was hung to the limb of a large oak tree in the presence of his wife, who behaved frantically. criminal was employed in a saloon kept by a white man named Wilson and was considered a leader and hightoned among his race. The name of young lady he attempted to outrage is withheld from the public. He entered her sleeping room through a window and attempted to prevent her giving alarm by threatening to kill her with a large club, but she screamed and her mother ran to her relief and identified Bradley before he could escape from t e front yard.
